

Mark Pavek is a Potato Research Agronomist and Professor within the Department of Horticulture at Washington State University in Pullman, WA. He has held this position since 2004 and conducts applied agronomic and variety development research. He uses his research results to provide outreach to the local industry, aiding in their potato production and marketing. Dr. Pavek has extensive farming experience and has worked for several large ag corporations. He was born and raised in Idaho, earning Agribusiness and Plant Science degrees from the University of Idaho and a Potato Agronomy/Horticulture degree from Washington State University. He enjoys spending his off-time with his wife Pamela and their family, friends and Labrador retrievers.